KNOW YOUR VITAMINS

Glutathione

Co-factor in Phase I hepatic detoxification; involved in synthesis of DNA & proteins, amino acid transport, enzyme activation, immune function. Some other beneficial effects include strong hair, nails, anti-aging, even skin tone and more. Repairs damage to cells caused by inflammation; Regulates the production of pro-inflammatory cvtokines; Recycles vitamins C and E

B Vitamins

Necessary for converting food into energy; Cofactors in the mitochondrial respiratory chain include B1, B2, B3, B5, B6, and Folate.

Vitamin C

Boosts your immune system, aids with cellular repair and also works as a powerful antioxidant. Assists iron uptake and transport; Precursor to carnitine and several hormones that affect energy. It helps you fight allergies, the cold and even flu-like symptoms. It also keeps your cells healthy during bacterial infections, speeding up the healing process

Amino Acids

Plays a crucial role in almost all biological processes. Vital for functions such as protein synthesis, tissue repair and nutrient absorption.

Vitamin D

Prevents and repairs skin damage as well as premature aging of the skin. Vitamin D is also a precursor to the hair growth cycle; Low levels are seen in patients with chronic fatigue syndrome; Deficiency causes reduced muscle strength. A potent modulator of inflammation, it helps turn off chronic inflammatory responses; Inhibits pro-inflammatory cytokine production.

Thiamine

This vitamin maintains your nerves in optimal and healthy condition. It is used to process and obtain energy from the foods you eat by turning nutrients into usable energy.

Magnesium

Magnesium is a mineral that your cells, nerves, muscles, bones and heart need to be healthy and strong. It also happens to improve metabolism and nutrient absorption.

Calcium

Calcium is a mineral that keeps your bones, muscles, teeth and nerves strong. It also has an important role in preventing diseases like obesity and Colon cancer

Zinc

Regulates immune system including allergic response. Low functional status of zinc is also linked to negative alterations of the immune-inflammatory

Vitamin B12

Keeps red blood cells and the central nervous system running in optimal conditions, ensuring that blood transports nutrients efficiently throughout the body.
